CHARMING, this elegant millstone house in Malakoff has preserved since 1900 all the refinement of the Belle Époque with Art Nouveau influences. It embodies the spirit of the grand Parisian bourgeois villas of its era.

DESCRIPTION

CHARMING, this elegant millstone house in Malakoff has preserved, since its construction in 1900, all the refinement of the Belle Époque enriched by delicate Art Nouveau influences. A true embodiment of the grand bourgeois villas built on the doorstep of Paris at the turn of the century, it combines architectural elegance, historical character, and timeless charm.

A remarkable rarity in this highly sought-after gateway-to-Paris setting, the property has belonged to only four families over the past 125 years, a testament to the exceptional care with which it has been maintained and preserved through generations. The current owners acquired the house in 1994 from the niece of the previous owner, Madame Lacour, a Parisian haute couture seamstress whose distinguished profession adds an additional layer of character to the home's story. As a discreet tribute to this heritage, the original Lacour factory sign has been carefully preserved.

This rare continuity of ownership gives the property an authenticity and soul seldom encountered on the Parisian residential market. Arranged over four levels, the house immediately captivates with its richly textured millstone façade, sculpted window surrounds, elegant wrought-iron balconies, expressive roofline, and beautifully balanced proportions characteristic of Belle Époque architecture. Behind this distinguished façade unfolds a warm and elegant interior atmosphere where original character, architectural harmony, and understated soph...
